History of Villa Mandriola

The villa, four kilometres away from Padova, was built in the 18th century by the San Bonifacio, a noble family from Verona. They are descended from the Italian poet Dante Alighieri and from Giulietta Capulet (of Romeo and Juliet by Shakespeare).

The history of Villa Mandriola has origins that go far back in time. Originally there were two different, separate buildings.

– The first contained the accommodation of the Prior and a small church dedicated to Saint Giacomo, with a tall entrance portal shaped in an arched style and a typical cusped bell-tower in Romanic style.

– The second contained a large Celebration Hall to compliment the park and aid its enjoyment. This settlement was made in the 18th century by the Count Anton Maria of San Bonifacio to celebrate the wedding of his son Ercole and the Marquess Teresa of the Obizzi.

The renovation of Villa Mandriola, in 1835, changed the function into a summer family residence.

The two original structures were joined with a linear building, creating a U-shaped plan enclosing a small flower court with a well in the middle. The main part of the building is today the ground floor living rooms and bedrooms on the first floor, all facing the romantic park.

Villa Mandriola Today

Surrounded by an ancient and romantic park of 12 acres where we find lush gardens, hills and a lake, Villa Mandriola today is the ideal location for a relaxing holiday or a work trip, to get in touch with nature, and a perfect base to visit all the tourist attractions of the Veneto Region. The earliest owners, who are still resident in a wing of the villa, have dedicated part of the main part of the building to guests like you. Villa Mandriola is an ideal opportunity for visitors to experience the countryside and local wine making. In the heart of the highly distinctive Veneto region, our guests can immerse themselves in the historic atmosphere while experiencing the simple and therapeutic pleasures of the locality. You are minutes away from medieval towns and villages, beautiful golf courses, natural thermal baths and traditional Venetian eateries. Villa Mandriola, enjoyable every season of the year, is an ideal restful holiday rental accommodation for families sharing, groups of friends or to organise weddings, parties or conferences.
